Description

An impressive antique Victorian rosewood upholstered settee dating from the late 19th century, beautifully crafted in richly figured rosewood and displaying the elegant proportions and bold silhouette associated with high-quality Victorian drawing room furniture. The serpentine shaped back is centred by an attractive carved crest featuring floral and shell motifs, while the substantial scrolling ends are beautifully carved and terminate in striking volute supports fitted with original castors. The rosewood throughout displays exceptional colour, depth, and grain, creating a warm and luxurious appearance that immediately commands attention within an interior. The generously proportioned upholstered seat, deep buttoned back, and original bolster cushions provide both comfort and decorative appeal. At over two metres in width, this is a substantial statement piece ideally suited to a period home, country house, townhouse, boutique hotel, or luxury interior design project. Victorian rosewood seating of this quality continues to attract collectors and interior designers due to the increasing scarcity of well-preserved examples. The combination of exceptional timber quality,...
