Description

An exceptional early 18th century walnut bureau of rich colour and beautifully figured veneers, retaining its original bun feet and an outstanding untouched character that collectors and interior designers increasingly seek. The fall-front opens to reveal a wonderfully fitted interior with an arrangement of small drawers with bone handles, pigeonholes and hidden secret compartments, showcasing the craftsmanship and ingenuity synonymous with fine Queen Anne period furniture. The striking walnut grain throughout, combined with elegant proportions and replaced period correct antique brass hardware, gives this antique bureau remarkable warmth and presence. Crafted during the Queen Anne period, this walnut bureau embodies the restrained elegance and practicality of early 18th century English furniture design. The beautifully patinated surface displays a depth of colour developed over centuries, while the interior reveals the sophisticated cabinetmaking techniques associated with the finest antique walnut bureaux of the era. Raised on its original turned bun feet, this piece retains an authenticity often lost through restoration or alteration, making it particularly desirable ...
