Description

Set of Four English Satin Birch Dining Chairs, Regency / William IV Period. A refined set of four English satin birch dining chairs dating to the late Regency / early William IV period, circa 1820–1835. The chairs are of elegant and well-considered form, with arched top rails centred by carved palmette motifs and further delicate detailing throughout the back rails and splats. The frames are particularly well drawn, showing a lightness and balance typical of the period. The turned and tapering front legs show a subtle nod to Gillows-influenced design, while the rear legs are of oval section with a pleasing curved rake, giving both strength and visual refinement. Constructed in satin birch, a timber widely used in the period to emulate the appearance of satinwood, the chairs display a warm, decorative tone with subtle variation across the frames, consistent with their age and material. The seats have been recently reupholstered in a neutral fabric which complements the colour of the timber well, allowing the chairs to be used immediately. A decorative and highly usable set, sitting comfortably between country and more formal Regency taste, making them especially versatile ...
