Description

A Late Regency / William IV plum pudding mahogany fold-over table, circa 1825-1835. A very attractive early 19th century mahogany fold-over table, of useful small proportions and excellent colour. The table works beautifully as a side table, tea table, occasional table or decorative hall table, with a richly figured plum pudding mahogany top, rounded front corners and a deep moulded frieze. The top opens to reveal its original polished mahogany interior, retaining a wonderfully rich, deep colour and a largely untouched period surface. Unlike a baize-lined card table, this example was made with a polished mahogany interior, making it especially suitable as a tea table or occasional entertaining table. The table is raised on a faceted pedestal column above a shaped quatreform platform base, with carved decoration to the collar and especially well-carved scrolling paw feet. The feet are of excellent quality, with strong definition and finely detailed carving, and retain their original concealed castors. This is a particularly good survivor piece, retaining a high degree of originality, lovely mellow colour and a pleasing untouched character throughout. While this is a kn...
