Description

A superb late 19th-century Indian ebony chair, intricately carved and full of the depth, weight, and craftsmanship that make Anglo-Indian furniture so sought after. The dense ebony frame is richly worked with scrolls, foliage, and floral motifs, all crisply carved and beautifully balanced across the back, arms, and legs. The chair stands on bold animal-paw feet, a classic feature of high-quality Indian carving from this period, adding both presence and a sense of sculptural drama. The upholstered seat and back panel soften the form while allowing the elaborate carving to remain the star of the piece. This is a striking decorative chair—ideal for a hallway, study, or as an accent piece in a curated interior. Its combination of craftsmanship, exotic timber, and late-Victorian taste gives it real character and collector appeal. Please contact me for delivery details.
