Description

A Very Attractive And Extremely Good Quality, Rarely Found, Early 19th Century Georgian Ash & Elm Harlequin Set Of 10 Farmhouse Kitchen Dining Chairs, Having Attractive Ladder Backs With Turned Upright Supports Over Rushed Seats, Raised On Elegant Bulbous Turned Legs United By Stretchers. Most designs of ladderback, or spindleback, chairs produced during the 18th and 19th centuries can generally be attributed to a particular region of the United Kingdom, owing to the individual design quirks and construction methods employed by local craftsmen. These chairs are no different, the particular combination of bold turned legs and shaped ladderbacks typically being associated with the West of the country and Wales. Another aspect which we particularly like about this set is that they are genuinely Georgian and early 19th century examples, meaning they possess real character, colour, patina and signs of honest use, unlike many later 19th or early 20th century examples regularly encountered on the market today. Naturally this has resulted in the expected minor nicks, marks, scrapes and general signs of age, although nothing which detracts from either the appearance or structural integrity of the set.
