Description

An Extremely Attractive And Exceptionally Good Quality Early 19th Century Regency Period Rosewood Quartetto Nest Of Four Occasional Tables, Having Wonderfully Figured Tops With Elegant Brass Line Stringing And Cockbeaded Decoration, Raised On Sophisticated Turned Upright Supports With Elegant Sabre Feet. These nests of tables are one of the most practical and versatile forms of antique furniture to be found and they remain as desirable today as they have ever been. Their ability to be separated and used individually around a room, before then neatly slotting back together when not required, means that they work exceptionally well within both traditional and contemporary interiors alike. This particular example is an especially elegant and superior quality set. Constructed from beautifully figured rosewood timbers throughout, the tops possess exceptionally well chosen veneers with striking grain patterns and superb colour, all further enhanced by the refined brass line stringing which frames each top beautifully. The overall proportions are particularly pleasing, with the tall slender turned supports and elegant feet giving the whole set a wonderfully light and sophistic...
