Description

Early 19th Century English Country Elm & Ash Rush-Seated Armchair, c.1820-1840 An exceptional early 19th century English country armchair, constructed in elm and ash and retaining its original rush seat. This is a particularly fine and unusually original example, with a wonderful original surface, excellent colour and the sort of honest aged wear that only develops through long use. The chair has a beautifully dry, mellow patina throughout, with especially attractive wear to the arms, front stretcher and seat. The chair has a beautifully dry, mellow patina throughout, with especially attractive wear to the arms, front stretcher and seat. Although a country piece, this is a chair of real quality and character. The shaped arms are finely drawn and elegant, while the back is formed with gently bent rails supporting a row of turned spindles — a lovely detail and one not t...
