Description

A stunning pair of 19th Dutch Delft blue and white table lamps professionally converted from vases. These double ogee shaped lamps now stand on dark wooden octagon bases and are painted with Chinese scholars in a garden landscape, surrounded by foliage and decorative borders. The soft ceramic and tin glaze used in Delft pottery is notoriously soft, making pieces vulnerable to chips. There is some minor nibbles to the necks of the lamp, these is hardly visible and in no way detracts from the appeal of the pair as can be clearly seen in the photos. Apart from this the lamps are in very good condition. They have been professionally rewired with fabric covered flex and are PAT tested. Blue and white pottery sits comfortably in most decorative schemes making it universally popular, these generously sized antique lamps are ready to illuminate any room. Shades not included. c. 1850
