Description

A gorgeous silver wine funnel, or strainer, made in Georgian England, bearing the hallmark 'SH'. This is the mark for Georgian Silversmith 'Solomon Hougham' a master silversmith working in London during the Georgian period. Traditional in shape, with its original side-clip still, an elegant piece of silverware in good antique condition, still ready for use today. This practical utensil, which is used to filter wine before it was consumed, before transferring it from the bottle to a decanter. The slight curve at the end of the spout causes the wine to flow slowly down the side of the bottle, thus improving aeration. I highly recommend this Georgian Wine Funnel, for all lovers of wine, whether an occasional wine buff, or serious collector. The funnel is in good condition for age, but has a couple of small bruises to the silver.
