Description

A Edwardian mahogany stationery cabinet dating from the early 20th century, featuring elegant satinwood string inlay to the doors and retaining a wonderfully practical interior arrangement. The cabinet is fitted with a pair of lockable doors which open to reveal three graduated drawers, each retaining its original recessed brass campaign-style handle. Above sits a sloping writing surface, giving the piece the appearance of a compact bureau while maintaining a small footprint, making it ideal for use as a desk-top cabinet, jewellery box, stationery cabinet, or collector's storage piece. Constructed in richly figured mahogany veneer with delicate satinwood inlaid decoration, the cabinet displays the restrained elegance typical of the Edwardian period. The moulded plinth base and stepped top add further architectural detail, while the warm patina acquired over more than a century enhances its character and appeal. A highly decorative and functional piece, equally suited to a study, dressing room, or retail display setting. H: 22 W: 31 D: 21 cm
