Description

A mid 19th century country stool, the thick, single-piece circular elm seat with incised line detail to the edge, raised on splayed turned legs united by stretchers. With an uncompromising vernacular character, from its slightly warped seat and charming asymmetry to its beautifully weathered surfaces born from generations of traditional utility, the piece functions perfectly as an occasional hall perch or fireside companion. Very good antique condition, with lots of characterful surface wear and a pleasing patina. Structurally sound, stable and ready to place. English, circa 1850.
