Description

An exceptional and highly unusual Regency pedestal centre table, dating from the early 19th century, beautifully embodies the refined neoclassical style of the period. Crafted from richly figured burr walnut, the impressive top displays striking natural grain and is finished with an elegant reeded edge. The frieze conceals two ingenious pull-out secret drawers, virtually invisible when closed, providing the perfect place to discreetly store valuables. The table is supported by a bold, corkscrew-turned central pedestal, terminating in a distinctive sculptural base. Each leg is finely carved in the form of a mythical hooved foot, an exceptionally rare and characterful feature that distinguishes this table from more conventional Regency examples. Generously proportioned, it is equally suited for use as a centre table, breakfast table, or small dining table. Combining a beautifully figured burr walnut top, superb craftsmanship, intricate carving, and cleverly concealed storage, it is both practical and visually impressive. A striking and versatile piece with considerable presence, it would complement both traditional and contemporary interiors. The table remains in good or...
