Description

An early 20th-century taxidermy kestrel diorama in a painted pine and glass case, arranged in the Hutchings style with naturalistic foliage and strong decorative presence. Why We Love These ... Taxidermy from this period has a sculptural quality that transcends its original purpose. The poised kestrel, combined with carefully arranged foliage and a well-proportioned case, gives this piece a quiet drama and presence. In the style of Hutchings, it balances realism with decorative sensitivity beautifully.
