Description

English brass and steel fireplace fender in the Art Nouveau style, circa 1890. Beautifully patinated with warm tones, verdigris and age-worn detail, this decorative fender adds year-round focus to any hearth. A characterful, usable piece with elegant lines and authentic surface wear. Why We Love This ... A good fireplace fender does more than frame the hearth - it gives the entire room a sense of structure, warmth and intention. This late 19th-century example has that perfect combination of Art Nouveau elegance and time-softened patina, making it as decorative in summer as it is functional in winter. The warm brass tones, the steel accents, the gentle bowing from age, and the touches of verdigris all create a surface that feels lived-in, atmospheric and quietly luxurious. It's the kind of piece you see in beautifully styled interiors: understated, characterful, and effortlessly grounding. Whether the fireplace holds a roaring fire, a candle display, stacked logs or simply stands as an architectural feature, this fender adds focus and refinement all year round.
