Description

An elegant mid-18th-century English polychrome Delftware charger, hand-painted in vibrant floral tones - a rare survivor of early domestic artistry and Georgian decorative tradition. Why We Love This ... This mid-18th-century English Delftware charger is a beautiful example of early domestic ceramics - hand-painted, full of life, and carrying the unmistakable charm of polychrome decoration. Its floral palette, softened by time, speaks to the warmth of Georgian homes and the artistry of the potteries that produced these expressive wares. Pieces like this are treasured not only for their decorative appeal but for the glimpse they offer into everyday life in the 1700s.
