Description

Victorian cotton reel display tree, circa 1890, with four adjustable tiers and rich patination - a rare survivor of late 19th-century English shop fittings. Why We Love This ... There is something wonderfully evocative about this Victorian cotton reel display tree - a piece that instantly transports you to the warm, bustling interiors of late 19th-century drapers, haberdasheries and general stores. Its tall, sculptural form, the rhythm of its tiered arms, and the beautifully aged surface all speak of decades of honest commercial use. Objects like this are increasingly scarce: functional shop fittings that were never meant to survive, yet somehow did. Today, they bring a sense of authenticity and quiet theatre to interiors - part sculpture, part history, and entirely characterful.
