Description

A 19th-century Eastern European milking stool in untouched original green paint, full of rural charm, authenticity, and the warm patina of generations of use. Why We Love This ... There is nothing contrived about this stool - the survival of the original green paint is what makes this stool so compelling. It offers a direct and unfiltered connection to rural life, with no later intervention or embellishment. The colour has mellowed beautifully with age, giving the piece warmth, honesty, and presence well beyond its modest scale. At a Glance - Appeal, Desirability & Collectibility • Date: 19th century • Origin: Eastern Europe • Materials: Elm with original painted surface • Dimensions: (Not supplied) • Condition: Good, original untouched condition - great colour and patina • Notable Details: • Untouched green paint; strong vernacular form with honest wear • Simple, functional construction with lovely surface character • Versatility: Ideal as a low stool, side table, plant stand, or sculptural accent • Collectibility: Strong - original vernacular furniture with surviving paint is increasingly sought after • Delivery is not included
