Description

Pair of American Cast Iron Owl Lamps, c.1930s – Converted from Andirons with Striking Blue Glass Eyes A charming and unusual pair of 1930s American cast iron owl lamps, originally andirons, now beautifully converted. Their bright blue glass eyes and impressive scale give them real presence and character. Full Description A wonderfully characterful pair of American cast iron owl lamps dating to the 1930s. These began life as andirons – the decorative supports used in traditional fireplaces – and have since been sensitively converted into lamps, retaining all the sculptural charm of their original form. Each owl is cast with excellent detail, from the textured feathers to the expressive posture, and both feature striking bright blue glass eyes that catch the light beautifully. Their scale is particularly impressive, giving them a strong decorative impact whether lit or unlit. The conversion has been carried out with care, allowing them to function as practical lamps while preserving their original integrity as cast iron decorative pieces. They make a playful yet sophisticated addition to a study, hallway, or eclectic interior. Details Period: c.1930s Origin: USA Mate...
