Description

An elegant and highly decorative Edwardian mahogany and satinwood writing desk / dressing table dating to circa 1905, displaying exceptional craftsmanship and refined period design. Constructed from beautifully figured mahogany with contrasting satinwood panels, this charming piece is richly embellished with hand-painted floral decoration throughout. The fall-front writing surface features intricate painted swags, flowers and musical trophies, while the twin stationery cabinets retain their original painted oval panels, creating a wonderfully sophisticated appearance. The superstructure incorporates a central mirror flanked by two useful cupboards, one fitted with letter divisions and the other with stationery compartments and original inkwells. Below, a spacious drawer provides additional storage, while the elegant tapering legs are further enhanced with painted decoration and joined by a shaped undertier. Equally suited as a writing desk, ladies dressing table, hall piece or decorative accent furniture, this versatile example embodies the elegance and practicality for which Edwardian furniture remains highly sought after. Presented in very good antique condition wit...
