Description

A fine quality late 19th century oak artist's studio easel by the renowned makers C. Roberson & Co. of London, retaining its original ceramic maker's roundel to the front. Constructed in solid quarter-sawn oak, this substantial easel stands on a heavy H-shaped base fitted with the original cast iron castors, providing excellent stability whilst remaining easy to manoeuvre around the studio. The easel is fully adjustable, featuring a rack-and-pinion mechanism operated by the original winding handle, allowing the canvas support to be raised and lowered smoothly. The central mast can be inclined to a variety of angles, while the adjustable upper clamp securely accommodates canvases of different heights, making it suitable for a wide range of painting and display requirements. The rear retains its original geared lifting mechanism and iron support braces, demonstrating the quality of its construction. Displaying the expected paint splashes and signs of many years of studio use, the easel has developed a wonderful honest patina that reflects its working life. Dimensions Height: 68 inches – 173cm adjustable to 101 inches – 257cm Width: 24.5 inches – 62cm Depth: 24 inches – 61cm
