Description

Fine Nest of Four Chinese Hongmu (Rosewood) Tables, Circa 1890 A superb late 19th-century Chinese nest of four graduated tables, dating to circa 1890, made from beautifully figured solid hongmu (Chinese rosewood). Each table features a finely grained Rosewood top with a raised edge above an elegant open fretwork apron, carved in the traditional linked-scroll pattern, supported on slender legs united by stretchers. The rich, warm patina and attractive grain of the timber highlight the excellent quality of the craftsmanship. The four tables nest neatly together, making them both highly practical and exceptionally decorative. These versatile tables can be used individually as lamp or occasional tables, or displayed together as an impressive nest. A fine example of traditional Chinese furniture from the late Qing Dynasty, combining elegance, craftsmanship, and functionality.
