Description

An exceptionally elegant Edwardian painted mahogany display cabinet and bookcase dating to circa 1900, combining fine craftsmanship, decorative artistry and practical storage within a highly desirable period design. Constructed from beautifully figured mahogany of rich warm colour and attractive grain, this impressive cabinet features an elegant serpentine form with a glazed upper display section above a substantial storage base. The upper section is centred by a striking astragal-glazed door, flanked by bowed glass display compartments fitted with shelves, providing an ideal showcase for porcelain, glassware, silver or treasured collections. The lower section offers excellent storage, incorporating three drawers above three cupboard doors. The central door is beautifully decorated with a hand-painted classical scene framed by delicate floral ornament, adding individuality and decorative charm. Fine stringing, crossbanding and carefully selected mahogany veneers further demonstrate the quality of the cabinet's construction. Beyond its aesthetic appeal, this cabinet offers remarkable versatility, functioning equally well as a display cabinet, bookcase, dining room cabin...
