Description

A fine pair of authentic early 19th-century English transferware tea or side plates, manufactured by the renowned Josiah Spode II factory in Hanley, Stoke-on-Trent, featuring a classic late Georgian all-over botanical floral transfer design and made in Spode's highly collectible 'New Stone'—an innovative, exceptionally durable ironstone body formulated to rival heavy Chinese porcelain imports. The plates feature a vibrant, richly detailed cobalt blue central bouquet with an intricate geometric and floral repeat border, finished with a traditional hand-painted brown ochre rim. The glaze exhibits a beautiful, soft 'flow' effect characteristic of high-quality cobalt firings of this era. The reverse of each plate bears the uncoloured uppercase impressed factory mark reading "SPODES NEW STONE". Because this manufacture mark was permanently retired following the sale of the factory in March 1833, these plates can be securely and precisely dated to the late Georgian period. Diameter: 15 cm. Form: Round flatware / Small tea or side plate. Very good antique condition consistent with 200+ years of age and light use.
