Description

A highly decorative and unique matching pair of imposing wrought iron panels featuring classical acanthus leaf details and elegant continuous scrollwork. These pieces display a wonderful, untouched rustic patina with authentic surface wear and oxidation that perfectly highlights its historic character. They are genuine salvage items, holding a beautifully weathered aesthetic that suits those who appreciate true age over modern perfection. While originally crafted as architectural elements—such as a balcony or gate fragments—their generous scale makes them exceptionally versatile for modern interior styling. Due to their unique layout, these versatile pieces can be mounted flush together to form one continuous, large-scale abstract panel, or divided to serve as a stunning asymmetric pair flanking a doorway or mirror. They are ready to be repurposed as a dramatic statement wall sculpture, a unique bed headboard (or two single unique head boards), or striking focal points in a garden room. Weathered / Salvage condition. Heavyweight and structurally intact. There is one point where the historic joint weld is missing between the scrolls (tightened with fine metal wi...
