Description

DESCRIPTION An attractive 18th-century Georgian oak lowboy of pleasing proportions. The moulded two-plank top sits above a long drawer over two smaller drawers, all with cock-beaded edges and retaining brass plate handles. The base has a shaped apron with shaped corner brackets and stands on square tapering legs. The lowboy has developed a rich colour and patina through age and use, making it an attractive and practical piece that make it particularly suitable as a console table, lamp table or hall table. DIMENSIONS Height: 78cm Width: 97cm Depth: 51cm CONDITION The lowboy is in good, solid condition and presents well overall. There are light marks, knocks and scratches consistent with its age and use. There is a small loss to the lower edge of the front left corner bracket together with minor historic strengthening repairs to the drawer bottoms and the tip of the rear right foot. The original lock is no longer present and the escutcheon opening has been neatly filled. The drawers run freely, all joints are solid and the piece retains an attractive colour and patina. The brass handles appear to be original. Overall, this is a well-proportioned eighteenth-century oak low...
