Description

Fine Early 19th-Century Gilt Bronze Multi-Armed Deity Figure with Turquoise Inlays A finely cast and hand-chased gilt bronze figure of a multi-armed deity, rendered in a traditional Himalayan or Tibeto-Chinese workshop style dating to the early 19th century. The exterior features a rich, warm fire-gilt surface that exhibits gentle, natural abrasion along the high points—such as the facial features, crown ridges, and knee areas—revealing the warm copper-alloy undertones beneath. The coloration shifts organically from bright golden highlights to deep, mottled earth tones. The multi-tiered crown and necklace are set with traditional turquoise cabochons, showing authentic natural surface character and minor inclusions. The hollow, open base reveals an earthy, dark core residue characteristic of traditional lost-wax casting. The interior features natural metal shrinkage gaps along the upper edge and original casting irregularities, all authentic to its age and artisan production rather than damage. Condition: In untouched, original condition, exhibiting honest age-related wear, stable core material, and beautiful patination throughout. Period: Early 19th Century Wei...
