Description

A very good example of these desirable tripod tables from the last quarter of the 18thc....this one has the added benefit of being a "tilting" tripod, so when not in use the top can be tilted up , so as not to take up too much room. The top is made of fruitwood with a turned oak pillar with Neo-classical urn shape, very popular at this time....the oak legs are of cabriole form and terminate in attractive shaped toes....excellent colour as you would expect from aged oak & fruitwood.....and in very nice condition. English. C1780-90.
