Description

DESCRIPTION An elegant Regency rosewood fold-over card table dating from around 1815, retaining beautifully figured burr yew crossbanding and delicate line inlay throughout. The hinged top opens to reveal the original baize-lined playing surface, making the table equally suitable as an occasional table or for use as a traditional games table. Raised on elegant Regency supports, it displays the restrained proportions and refined craftsmanship associated with the period. The richly figured rosewood veneers and contrasting burr yew border create an especially attractive appearance, making this an excellent decorative piece even when closed. DIMENSIONS Height: 72.5cm Width: 89.5cm Depth (closed): 44cm Depth (open): 88cm CONDITION Presented in good antique condition. There are marks, knocks and scratches consistent with over 200 years of age and use. The top has some historic water marks to the polish together with minor surface scratches and small losses to sections of the line inlay. The table has a very slight movement and, as is common with antique fold-over card tables, the top does not sit perfectly flat when closed. The joints remain stable and both the hinged top and...
