Description

A fine late-19th-century French writing table, beautifully executed in the Louis XVI Revival taste and distinguished by richly figured kingwood veneers, intricate parquetry and finely cast gilt-bronze mounts. The rectangular top is centred by a decorative parquetry panel, framed by contrasting crossbanding and a moulded edge with projecting rounded corners. Beneath, the frieze is ornamented with further parquetry panels and opens as a generously proportioned full-width drawer, providing useful storage while preserving the table's elegant architectural form. The central drawer front is enriched with an impressive gilt-bronze plaque depicting playful classical putti, complemented by beaded ormolu borders, floral corner mounts and further gilt-bronze detailing to the legs. The table is raised on four slender, tapering and fluted supports, each inset with decorative mounts and terminating in gilt-bronze sabots. Its refined proportions and comparatively compact size make it highly versatile. It would function beautifully as a writing desk, dressing table, console table or decorative centre table within a study, bedroom, drawing room or reception space. The combination of k...
