Description

This outstanding antique Regency extending dining table, crafted from beautifully figured solid mahogany, comfortably seats up to fourteen people and dates from 1830. Retaining all four original leaves, it effortlessly transforms from a compact dining table into an impressive full-length table whilst also separating into a superb pair of matching console tables, making it both elegant and exceptionally versatile. The magnificent figured mahogany top displays rich flowing grain and a wonderful depth of colour across the entire surface. Raised on eight finely reeded tapering legs terminating in the original brass cup castors, the table is a classic example of Regency craftsmanship, combining refined proportions with practical functionality. A particularly desirable feature is its ability to divide into two matching console tables, providing the perfect solution for everyday use before being reassembled for larger gatherings. The four original leaves fit beautifully, creating a seamless appearance with excellent colour consistency throughout. A rare opportunity to acquire an outstanding Regency dining table of exceptional quality that is equally suited to both period and con...
