Description

DESCRIPTION An impressive George III mahogany breakfront linen press dating from the late 18th century. The moulded ogee cornice sits above four plain fielded panel doors arranged in an elegant breakfront configuration. The lower section is fitted with nine drawers, all raised on bracket feet, providing an exceptional amount of additional storage. The interior is arranged in three distinct sections, making the press particularly practical for modern use. The left-hand section encloses three adjustable shelves above three drawers. The central section provides full-height hanging space above a further three drawers. The right-hand section offers additional full-height hanging space, enclosed by an upper door and a lower door designed as faux drawers to maintain the balanced external appearance. With its restrained Georgian proportions, generous storage capacity and impressive scale, this is an elegant and highly functional piece, equally suited for use as a wardrobe or as statement bedroom furniture. The press dismantles into seven individual sections, including the cornice, making transportation and installation considerably easier than its overall size might suggest. ...
