Description

A truly beautiful antique diamond cluster ring dating to circa 1910, capturing the refined elegance and romantic charm of the Edwardian era. Expertly crafted in 18ct yellow gold with a platinum-topped setting, this timeless piece showcases a stunning navette-shaped cluster of sparkling natural old cut diamonds, each chosen for its individual character and exceptional antique brilliance. The cluster has an estimated total diamond weight of approximately 1.25 carats, creating an impressive display of fire and scintillation. The elongated navette design is both elegant and flattering, making it a classic choice that remains as desirable today as it was over a century ago. Although the ring is unhallmarked, the mount has been electronically tested and confirmed as 18ct gold. It has been professionally cleaned and polished in our workshop and is presented in excellent antique condition, ready to be worn and cherished for generations to come. A romantic and timeless choice, this exquisite Edwardian ring would make a wonderful antique engagement ring, a memorable anniversary gift, or a treasured addition to any fine antique jewellery collection.
