Description

1930s Oak refectory dining table This high-quality oak refectory table would have been made in the 1930s in a high-end cabinetmakers workshop, probably in the Ipswich area. The thick 3cm solid planked top has toned to a wonderful golden honey colour. The refectory stands on a pair of carved oak bulbous supports, that are joined by a straight stretcher. The design is taken from an Elizabethan design, using the fine carving design. These tables are so good for a working kitchen and can be used with a young family with all the wear it takes. Imagine sitting around this with your family and friends and have many informal celebrations at it.
