Description

1950s Eight-Strand Freshwater Seed Pearl Necklace with 9ct Gold Clasp. A fabulous vintage eight-strand cultured freshwater seed pearl necklace, dating from circa the 1950s and comprising an extraordinary 1,680 individually strung pearls. The profusion of delicate cream pearls creates a wonderfully luxurious, softly textured appearance. The eight supple strands may be worn loosely draped for a classic layered effect or gently twisted together to form a richer torsade-style necklace, making this an exceptionally versatile jewel. Measuring approximately 2.8–3.1mm, the oval to button-shaped pearls display attractive pink and green overtones and very good lustre. Their soft, silvery glow catches the light beautifully, while the multiple strands create remarkable movement and presence around the neckline. The necklace is completed by an elegant fluted barrel clasp, crafted in 9ct yellow gold. Its sculptural, deeply grooved design provides a handsome contrast to the delicate pearls and forms a secure push-and-twist fastening. At approximately 18 inches long, the necklace sits gracefully at the base of the neck. Despite the delicacy of the individual pearls, its eight strands...
