Description

Overview A handsome antique Georgian oak dresser base dating from circa 1800, displaying the honest construction, rich colour and naturally developed patina associated with early English country furniture. Constructed predominantly from solid oak, the dresser has a broad rectangular top above three useful frieze drawers and a substantial panelled lower section, providing excellent storage while retaining the restrained architectural character of Georgian furniture. Key Features Antique Georgian oak dresser base Dating from circa 1800 English country furniture Predominantly solid oak construction Three frieze drawers Period-style brass handles Decorative brass escutcheons Panelled cupboard doors Central fielded-panel section Useful internal shelved storage Rich warm oak colour and patina Practical shallow depth Craftsmanship & Detail The dresser has developed an attractive warm surface through more than two centuries of age and use, with natural variation in colour, grain and patination giving the piece considerable visual character. The upper section incorporates three drawers arranged beneath the broad top, each fitted with brass handles and escutcheons. Below, ...
