Description

Antique Late 19th Century Chinese Lacquered Clothes Rack / Robe Stand An elegant carved Chinese provincial robe stand (clothes rack or towel rail) dating from the late Qing dynasty, circa 1880–1900. Built in a classic minimalist oriental silhouette, this freestanding rack beautifully combines functional design with traditional decorative elements. The upper frame consists of two slender, rounded upright support posts holding a top rail that terminates in beautifully hand-carved, upturned scroll finials. Two further horizontal bars sit below, reinforced at the joints with carved cloud-form brackets and scrolling spandrels. A central turned peg extends from the top rail, offering an additional hanging option for hats or garments. The rack is anchored at the base by wide sledge feet flanked by prominent, deeply carved openwork scroll brackets. The uprights are joined at the bottom by an attractive pierced geometric lattice stretcher panel, which doubles as an excellent shelf space for shoes, bags, or folded textiles. The piece is finished in an authentic, warm reddish-brown provincial lacquer. Beneath the lacquer, the frame is constructed from a regional timber—most ...
