Description

Type of Artwork: A very attractive vintage batik textile panel, depicting two large poinsettia flowers amongst stylised foliage against a wonderfully muted green ground. The design has been produced on woven fabric using the traditional wax-resist batik technique, with characteristic fine crackling running throughout the dyed surface. The palette is particularly appealing, combining faded crimson red, ochre, cream, olive and blue-green tones. The natural variations within the dye and extensive batik crackle give the piece a beautifully aged and individual appearance. Presented in a simple dark-stained wooden frame which complements the colours extremely well. The construction, frame and fittings appear consistent with some age. I believe the piece to be mid-20th century, although I have been unable to establish an exact date, maker or country of origin and therefore offer it simply as a vintage batik textile work. The reverse retains its old wooden backing, hanging rings and cord, together with several remnants of an old printed-paper backing or label. Approximate Age of Artwork: Circa Mid 20th Century
