Description

Exceptional Regency Rosewood Tilt-Top Breakfast Table (c. 1820–1840) An extraordinarily fine statement piece of early 19th-century British cabinetmaking, this Regency period rosewood tilt-top breakfast table represents the absolute pinnacle of high-period design, timber selection, and carving. Key Features & Highlights Master-Carved Base & Column: Rosewood is notoriously dense, oily, and unforgiving to carve, requiring extraordinary precision and skill. The central support column features deep, crisp lotus leaf acanthus carving above a hand-carved egg-and-dart collar. The concaved quadform plinth base sits upon substantial, hand-carved melon-lobed bun feet with carved rosette caps—crafted by a true master cabinetmaker at the height of their skill. Exceptional Grain & Rich Patina: The expansive tilt-top features book-matched rosewood veneers exhibiting dramatic dark figure, striking ink-black striations, and a rich, warm, deep-red tone with a glass-like finish. Generous Proportions: Measuring 130 cm in diameter, this table is noticeably larger than typical breakfast tables of the era, comfortably seating up to 6 people while offering an impressive visual presence in a...
