Date of manufacture: 18th Century

Description

An early 18th-century English oak side table of elegant proportions and excellent original condition. This attractive low side table (or lowboy) retains its original rectangular top with distinctive canted corners above three drawers fitted with their brass ring handles. The central drawer is flanked by two side drawers, all running above a boldly shaped and scalloped frieze. The table stands on four straight tapering legs ending in original pad feet. All timbers are original throughout, including the boarded top and the drawer construction. It retains a lovely deep original colour and rich surface patina, with the honest wear and character expected of a piece of this age. A practical and stylish example of early Georgian oak furniture
