Description

A superb William IV figured mahogany extending dining table dating to circa 1835, with wonderfully elegant proportions and an exceptionally handsome classical design. The table has a beautifully figured mahogany top with softly rounded corners and a moulded edge, displaying the rich colour, depth and attractive natural figuring of the timber. A particularly distinctive feature is the design of the four solid mahogany legs. Beautifully shaped and turned in the bold yet elegant William IV manner, each has a substantial turned collar beneath the table, an unusual sculpted and lobed upper section and a long vase-shaped taper, finishing with further rounded turning and brass castors. The flowing, almost architectural profile gives the table tremendous character without being overly ornate, creating a design that is both substantial and remarkably graceful. The clean expanse of figured mahogany, restrained decoration and sculptural legs give the table a timeless appearance. Although unmistakably a fine English table of the William IV period, its simplicity and strong proportions allow it to sit equally successfully within a traditional dining room or a very modern interior.
