Description

In 35 years of trading, I cannot recall seeing a Georgian glazed corner cabinet as beautiful as this one. I am clearly not alone in that view: within the past 60 years, someone commissioned the elegant, sympathetic stand on which it now rests. Together, the cabinet and stand make a striking interior statement and provide an ideal setting for displaying a treasured collection. The cabinet has been skilfully lined with ivory-coloured moiré silk and finished with complementary braid. Its decorative fretted and inlaid swan's-neck pediment is original, as are the fine glazing bars, which are perfectly placed to showcase the contents. The internal bolts, hinges and locks are all in excellent order, and, as shown in the images, it retains a key with a decorative tassel. Condition is very good overall, with only two or three tiny pinpoint marks to the internal silk and, as expected after around two hundred years, minor evidence of earlier restoration to the finely constructed swan's neck. The backboards and mahogany-faced softwood shelving appear to be original; however, the pigment once used to visually blend the softwood with the mahogany has been removed, leaving the underside...
