Description

This Regency rosewood desk attributed to William Trotter dates to circa 1820 and is designed in the Grecian taste, with a cross banded rosewood top, carved trestle supports and finely detailed rosewood veneers throughout. The black leather writing surface has recently been laid with broken gilt tooling and an antique finish, complementing the rosewood cross banded top with cross grain edging above the shallow frieze. The frieze is fitted with two full length mahogany lined drawers, retaining the original solid rosewood turned knobs and finely made dovetail construction to the drawer linings. The reverse and sides are veneered with lively long grain rosewood panels, finished with protruding rounded corners above a tightly carved egg and dart moulding. The concealed shaped stretcher beneath the top provides additional support to the construction while allowing the desk to retain its elegant Grecian style trestle end supports. The inverted C scrolls with carved tulips flank tapered rosewood veneered end supports, centred by stylised rosettes above broad scrolls terminating on egg and dart moulded plinth bases. The end standards feature double reed edging that tapers down...
