Description

A charming and highly practical antique English oak corner cupboard on stand, dating from the late 19th century, circa 1880. Beautifully proportioned and designed specifically to make use of a corner space, this unusual piece combines a traditional enclosed corner cupboard with an elegant open two tier stand below. The upper section features a single panelled cupboard door, framed by attractive moulded detailing and topped with a substantial projecting cornice. The door retains its decorative metal escutcheon and original style key, adding considerably to the period character of the piece. Inside, the cupboard provides three shaped corner shelves, offering useful storage or display space for glassware, ceramics, books or decorative objects. One particularly useful feature is its versatility: the upper cupboard can be separated from the lower stand and wall-mounted independently, allowing the piece to be used either as the complete tall corner cabinet shown in the photographs or as a traditional wall-hanging corner cupboard. Wall Depth / distance along each wall: approximately 42 cm Good antique condition with a solid and sturdy construction. There are age related ma...
