Description

A beautiful and characterful antique open armchair, dating from the late Victorian period, circa 1880. The chair has an elegant, restrained design with a tall open back featuring a finely reeded upper rail and an attractive pierced central panel decorated with a sequence of oval motifs. Particularly attractive are the long, gently shaped wooden armrests, supported at the front by slender turned uprights with finely ringed decoration. The straight legs are joined by stretchers, creating a strong and well balanced traditional frame. The chair has been finished with a striking deep blue velvet upholstered seat, providing an attractive contrast against the warm, dark tones of the timber. Its relatively compact proportions make this a very versatile antique chair. It would work particularly well as a desk chair, occasional armchair, bedroom chair, hallway chair or statement chair within both traditional and contemporary interiors. Seat Height: 42 cm. The timber retains a rich aged colour and attractive patina, with the small variations and signs of previous use that give an antique piece its individual character.
