Description

Georgian Inlaid Games Table, c.1820 A charming early 19th-century Georgian inlaid games table, of particularly decorative form and displaying a wonderfully varied selection of contrasting timbers. The square top is centred by an integral chess and draughts board, finely worked in alternating light and dark woods and enclosed by a broad geometric inlaid border. The combination of different veneers gives the table a particularly rich and individual appearance. The top is raised upon an elegant turned pedestal column, with a beautifully shaped baluster profile, terminating in a distinctive triform platform base. The base itself continues the decorative scheme with contrasting inlaid veneers and stands upon three small turned bun feet. A delightful piece of Georgian cabinetmaking, combining craftsmanship with practicality. Its compact proportions make it particularly versatile: equally appealing as an occasional or side table when closed, while providing a decorative games table when required. The warm patination and subtle variations between the different timbers give the piece considerable character and charm. England, circa 1820.
