Description

A mid 18th century (circa 1760) Welsh oak cwpwrdd tridarn (three part cupboard) of superb patina (colour), probably from the Snowdonia region of Wales. The tridarn consists of an open section to the top with turned columns at either end, the sides having desirable wavy slats above a fielded panel. To the back of the top section are three fielded panels with a display shelf, not original, although this has been part of the piece for a considerable number of years. This leads down to the middle section with unusual fine quality moulded frieze to the top with ebony embellishments with turned drop finials at each end. This section consists of three doors with arched fielded panels, the two outer doors having an inlaid design of oak and bog oak of Celtic influence (resembling the Celtic cross) with brass knobs & escutcheons, also having an unusual split bobbin-turned decoration in between these doors. The central door is carved with 'IR 22 1761' with a brass escutcheon with key to enable it to locked. The initials 'IR' on the door were possibly to celebrate either a marriage or maybe a new home or it could also be referring to 'Ionawr', the Welsh for January which is abbr...
