Description

Antique Walnut Iron Bound Trunk of Sir Randolph Isham Routh KCB, Waterloo Commissary General A rare and historically important antique walnut iron bound trunk once belonging to Sir Randolph Isham Routh KCB, the distinguished Commissary General at the Battle of Waterloo. Constructed in solid walnut and reinforced with robust iron bindings, this trunk was built for military travel, secure storage, and the rigours of campaign life. The brass nameplate engraved "Commissary General Sir H. I. Routh" confirms its provenance and elevates it from a fine antique to a museum worthy artefact. The walnut retains a rich, deep patina, complemented by the original iron strapping and lock plate, giving the trunk exceptional presence and authenticity. This is a rare opportunity to acquire a genuine piece of British military history with direct ties to one of the most decisive battles in European history. About Sir Randolph Isham Routh KCB Sir Randolph Isham Routh (1782–1858) served as one of Britain's most respected military administrators. Rising through the ranks of the Commissariat Department, he became Commissary General, responsible for organising and supplying the British Army during...
