Description

Clockwise is delighted to offer this exceptional Scottish Georgian longcase clock by Thomas Kennedy of Kilmarnock, an accomplished clockmaker, gunmaker and innovative engineer whose work has considerable historical interest. Standing an impressive 82½ inches (6ft 10½in) high, the clock has a magnificent flame mahogany case, richly decorated throughout with crossbanding, fine inlay and marquetry. The quality of the cabinet is particularly noteworthy, complementing the superbly decorated dial to striking effect. The case stands on elegant bracket feet and features an exceptionally attractive trunk, flanked by inset spiral quarter columns. These are echoed by matching full spiral columns to either side of the hood door, which retains its lock, and each column is surmounted by brass capitals. A sound fretwork panel to either side completes the architectural character of the splendidly inlaid hood. The long trunk door is extensively decorated with further inlay and marquetry, while the similarly embellished base adds to the impressive overall presentation. The 14-inch painted dial is a particular highlight. The spandrels depict scenes representing the four countries of the...
