PROVENANCE: See Image of History of Barbourne (Formerly Tintagel) House, Worcester History: In 1903 Frederick John Mayers, a carpet designer with a studio in George Street, Kidderminster, purchased the land from James Ward, the Younger, and designed Tintagel which was built in 1904. Mayers had previously owned 54 Hill Grove, Kidderminster, which he had commissioned the famous architect, C F A Voysey to design for him in 1899 (noted in the book 'C F A Voysey - Architect and Designer 1857 - 1941' by Brandon-Jones). Mayers was greatly influenced by Voysey when he designed Tintagel and there are many Voysey inspired features, for example the tapered buttresses, the roof lines, the windows including window catches, the paneled doors, the pierced heart details in the staircase and cupboard work etc. He also asked some of his artist friends to design certain features in the house, including the...
